The Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major

Beginning 2014-15

For further information about the Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major, contact

Glen McClish
Professor and Chair
Department of Rhetoric and Writing Studies
gmclish@mail.sdsu.edu
The Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major at San Diego State University (beginning 2014-15)

Rhetoric refers to the study and uses of written, spoken, and visual language in a variety of formats and media. The new Rhetoric and Writing Studies major at San Diego State University—the first and only such major in the California State University system and in the San Diego region—aims to produce sophisticated writers and interpreters of texts whose analytical, communicative, and persuasive abilities will meet the demands of almost every twenty-first century profession, including business, law, marketing and advertising, politics, science, education, professional writing and more. The major also provides excellent preparation for graduate-level study in business, law, and a range of disciplines in the humanities and sciences. Students in the major study how persuasion and meaning function in a wide variety of public and professional contexts, learning how to:

- Communicate and express ideas effectively;
- Persuade and inspire diverse audiences;
- Analyze and produce information, messages, and arguments in a range of media and technologies;
- Express a position clearly and ethically.

The Rhetoric and Writing Studies major is an ideal subject of study to combine with other majors or minors. Its small classes will facilitate meaningful interaction with faculty and it complements virtually any field of study or content area.

The prerequisites for the RWS major consist of the General Education lower division writing requirements (RWS 100 and RWS 200, for example) and RWS 250 (Rhetoric in Everyday Life). (RWS 250 also satisfies a General Education requirement in Foundations of Learning, Humanities.) The major is comprised of a minimum of 30 units in Rhetoric and Writing Studies. Four core courses (twelve units) are required:

- RWS 500W Advanced Writing Strategies or
- RWS 503W Professional Writing;
- RWS 411 Digital Rhetorics;
- RWS 510 Rhetoric and Culture;
- RWS 498 Seminar: Writing and Research or
- RWS 506 Internship

The remaining six courses (18 units), selected by students to suit their career and education goals, are chosen from electives in Rhetoric and Writing Studies, including:

- RWS 412 Issues in Gender and Rhetoric
- RWS 414 Rhetoric in Visual Culture
- RWS 500W Advanced Writing Strategies (if not taken for the core)
- RWS 501 Editing
- RWS 503W Professional Writing (if not taken for the core)
- RWS 504 Advanced Professional Writing
- RWS 505 Writing Project Management
- RWS 507 Professional Communication in Nonprofit Organizations
- RWS 508W Scientific Writing
- RWS 509 Teaching Composition in Secondary Schools
The Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major at San Diego State University (beginning 2014-15)

Rhetoric refers to the study and uses of written, spoken, and visual language in a variety of formats and media. The new Rhetoric and Writing Studies major at San Diego State University—the first and only such major in the California State University system and in the San Diego region—aims to produce sophisticated writers and interpreters of texts whose analytical, communicative, and persuasive abilities will meet the demands of almost every twenty-first century profession, including business, law, marketing and advertising, politics, science, education, professional writing and more. The major also provides excellent preparation for graduate-level study in business, law, and a range of disciplines in the humanities and sciences. Students in the major study how persuasion and meaning function in a wide variety of public and professional contexts, learning how to:

- Communicate and express ideas effectively;
- Persuade and inspire diverse audiences;
- Analyze and produce information, messages, and arguments in a range of media and technologies;
- Express a position clearly and ethically.

The Rhetoric and Writing Studies major is an ideal subject of study to combine with other majors or minors. Its small classes will facilitate meaningful interaction with faculty and it complements virtually any field of study or content area.

The prerequisites for the RWS major consist of the General Education lower division writing requirements (RWS 100 and RWS 200, for example) and RWS 250 (Rhetoric in Everyday Life). (RWS 250 also satisfies a General Education requirement in Foundations of Learning, Humanities.) The major is comprised of a minimum of 30 units in Rhetoric and Writing Studies. Four core courses (twelve units) are required:

- RWS 500W Advanced Writing Strategies or RWS 503W Professional Writing;
- RWS 411 Digital Rhetorics;
- RWS 510 Rhetoric and Culture;
- RWS 498 Seminar: Writing and Research or RWS 506 Internship

The remaining six courses (18 units), selected by students to suit their career and education goals, are chosen from electives in Rhetoric and Writing Studies, including:

- RWS 412 Issues in Gender and Rhetoric
- RWS 414 Rhetoric in Visual Culture
- RWS 500W Advanced Writing Strategies (if not taken for the core)
- RWS 501 Editing
- RWS 503W Professional Writing (if not taken for the core)
- RWS 504 Advanced Professional Writing
- RWS 505 Writing Project Management
- RWS 507 Professional Communication in Nonprofit Organizations
- RWS 508W Scientific Writing
- RWS 509 Teaching Composition in Secondary Schools
The Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major

Beginning 2014-15

For further information about the Rhetoric and Writing Studies Major, contact

Glen McClish
Professor and Chair
Department of Rhetoric and Writing Studies
gmclish@mail.sdsu.edu